

An attendee at the event wrote to Eve saying, “I wanted to reach out to say how impacted I was by your speech at Employment of People with Disabilities: Achieving the Americans with Disabilities Act’s Goal of Economic Self-Sufficiency. I’ve been percolating over all of the amazing points you made, especially the importance of having high expectations for people with disabilities, the importance of accessible job applications, and how companies should be embarrassed to exploit people with disabilities through sheltered workshops in order to label their products “Made in America”.

Meaningful employment opportunities with upward mobility is a value we share. Your passion is infectious, and I hope to provide that same passion to my internship program for people with intellectual disabilities. Thank you for the work you do, and for the message you gave.”
