Washington, DC Trial Attorney Joins Brown, Goldstein & Levy

Brown, Goldstein & Levy is proud to announce that prominent District of Columbia trial attorney Kobie Flowers has joined the firm as a partner.

Kobie Flowers began his legal career as a member of the Attorney General's Honors Program in the Criminal Section of the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division. He was part of the team that successfully tried the largest case against federal correctional officers in the history of the Civil Rights Division.

After his tenure as a federal civil rights prosecutor, Kobie took on the challenge of representing indigent people as an assistant federal public defender in Baltimore, Maryland. He successfully represented clients charged with federal felonies, including fraud, false statements, obstruction of justice, bribery, tax, and perjury charges.

Following his government service, Kobie entered private practice and focused on complex commercial litigation, assisting corporate clients with investigations involving the False Claims Act, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, and federal securities laws, as well as continuing his criminal defense practice. Later, he gained experience in mass toxic tort litigation.

Kobie has litigated cases in federal and state courts throughout the United States and internationally in the military commissions in Guantanamo Bay as a criminal defense lawyer.

"We are delighted that Kobie has joined our firm. He brings a wide range of experience to several of our practice areas and expands our activities in the District of Columbia market. With Kobie's arrival, Brown, Goldstein & Levy will have a District of Columbia office," said Sharon Krevor-Weisbaum, Brown, Goldstein & Levy's managing partner.

Kobie Flowers stated, "I admire Brown, Goldstein & Levy's 30-plus-year commitment to civil and human rights. I am impressed with their attorneys – both past and present. I look forward to a new association with them. In our discussions, we found that our experience was a good match and that this would be a great opportunity for both me and the firm to grow together."
